I. An Interview with Jairus –

What then is the actual historical analysis of the current world? Should we be materialists into Marx or should we embrace Sirohi as you did and why? What then is the methodological shift in your work?

Jairus Banaji here, I would argue that we are very sophisticated thinkers of the Marxist type in Sirohi, I also argue it is about labour these days and its labouring histories, which also span a in Sirohi. I mean we become more Parsi and concrete and properly abstract when we meet Sirohianism. It is Jewish type abstract and concrete and is also then a formalism in that Lenin sense and Trotskyist entirely according to me.

I argue the political type of Marxism, is finally what we call Sirohianism. It is then also able to understand fully the contemporary moment in history. It is full of jokes on historians, and

But my problem would be how this modality of integration between labour and capital and parlioaments in its long history of what is called price-series analysis which becomes an international and parliamentary price-bargaining culture strong in Indian history as a long bargaining culture history then is wedded to the process of the CPB and CPIM in India, which though in a long history of fascism in India is also being attacked and diminished to the lower scale of a race to the bottom. This spontaneous working class in general strike models in India has finally won.

I mean the European parliaments though have no respect for the working class except augmenting its aristocracy and this then becomes a segmented labour market skewed to money-culture and wage-pension culture, which then is welfarist. I mean though it is Keynes therefore their argument. It should be instead a general strike model of working class organizing which would empower it to the relevance of parliaments and this in turn would make it a working class. I mean in the segmentation of the English contemporary working class, comes also the complex play of capital which wins and working class which is segmented and then in fact complexly segmented, and not made. A class is usually made by the work of trade unions and complex segmented labouring classes – which in one abstract analysis is then in a large sense demonstrating and becoming political conscious classes. Instead of which we have segmented labour markets and such market policies being applied, I mean public policy is too skewed against the old making of the English working class.

Labour markets then analyse also the process of backward working classes losing out. I also mean then in one statistical analysis that 45 percent of the working class is advanced and the remaining are losing out. And in India the backward is major and 70-80 percent of the class, and is winning.

We mean just the process of evaluating the economics and just the process of elaborating economics is enough

Do a lot of student politics.

He means student politics especially.

Let students elaborate economics in the Polish Consulate gates.

Let them organize a critique.

Of what is called then criticism.

Why this is auto-production is because it is an free praxis in that Antonio Negri sense.

That process is our economics.

Our economics is to talk about wages right now in the coal worker section.
